Deactivation of cylinders always seemed like a good idea. Why waste fuel to run an 8-cylinder when it's a lot of time you don't need all the cylinders that work anyway? The last time GM tried it was a Cadillac V-8 in 1981, and it was a catastrophe. Cadillacs are designed to work with 8, 6 or 4 cylinders, depending on the driver's needs. Unfortunately, it often did nothing. General Motors plans to try again with an iteration of Vortec V-8 scheduled for 2004. As always, the main goal of the program, called on-demand displacement, is to improve fuel economy. GM makes the technology standard, cutting off four cylinders when they are not needed and bringing them back to life instantly at that time. It's not necessary to say that fuel savings vary depending on the type of driving, but GM estimates and expects a profit of about 25%. On-demand displacement and the upcoming hybrid gas-electric version of a full-size GM pickup truck seem to be a means of delivering the more fuel-efficient trucks gm has promised. If the driving situation does not require all eight cylinders, the engine uses hydraulic pressure to remove the locking pin, collapse the lifter and close the valve in the bank of one of the four cylinders. In reactifier mode, when the hydraulic pressure is removed, the lock pin returns to the latched position, the lifter is restored and the cylinder becomes a normal function. But reversing the notion of having the same performance and better fuel economy, it will be of interest to power junkies. That means the same fuel economy and better performance. From that premise, it is easy to understand the ongoing story among gm types of 6.0-liter Corvettes in the product plan, already no one will give details about how and when it will happen. It just sounds like a good chance. For now, let's expect a system currently available in the V-12 Power Mercedes Benz S and CL Class sedans that not only work with on-demand displacement, but can run on 12 or 6 cylinders. If so, we can start thinking about the possibility of performance. This content is created and managed by third parties and imported to this page so that users can provide their e-mail addresses. As more and more people draw home in search of relief from the fast pace of the times, well-designed decks are becoming the preferred place to relax after work, entertain friends and regroup with family. This article is about deck design, whether you're accessing an existing space or building one from the start. Many of the photos accompany dozens of deck ideas, from timeless classic designs to bolder, more modern setups. New or notThe improved outdoor area, the call of the deck depends on several factors: the site itself, the style and size of the house, individual lifestyle and personal preferences, and budget. And while the site is a determining factor in choosing the style of deck, and while the budget may determine how many amenities it can include, other less specific aspects must also be addressed. Taking a lifestyle stock is a good place to start. Who will use this area and how many functions are expected to be fulfilled, whether the space primarily serves as a transition zone between the house and the garden, or doubles as an indoor and outdoor room? Will the setting be casual or formal, a quiet retreat, or a hub for activities? Personal preference is also an important issue to consider when planning an outdoor area - whether it is a preference for stains of a particular color on the floorboards or a specific style of handbaling to enclose the deck. But a successful deck is more than a response to a specific location or need. The well-designed deck integrates diverse elements into a functional and aesthetically enjoyable whole that blends with a comfortable home and an adjacent garden. For example, the material does not need to exactly match the façade of the house, but it should complement it with style and mood. The idea is to create a unified look that balances a variety of colors, forms, and textures to add interest and offset monotony. The next page offers a wide sampling of deck styles that serve as inspiration for developing and planning outdoor living spaces. A portfolio of ideas rather than how-to manuals, this article explains the basic deck types and presents a number of deck styles for both modern and traditional homes. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Ideas decorating ideas Patio ideas Content When your deck ideas include steep upper and lower slopes, they know they are a little harder to tame than gentle ones, and multiple levels are one of the best solutions. Designing and constructively, gradually stepping up the level above or below the incline is practical, visually exciting and more to suit the natural setting. Most houses are built at the top of the slope rather than at their base, so most decks tend to start high and move downwards, often as a cascade of several platforms, sometimes as easy split levels. Of course, many homes probably lend themselves to a single high-level deck cantly be over a hillside. However, high decks can present problems, especially if they are large. They can cast shadows on the lower room, and from the bottom of the slope, they may dominate the house itself. Steep terrain usually dictates a hefty understructure designed to withstand various soil conditions and support the deck. HidingGrating, siding, or even lowering from view with shrubbery can give your deck and your home a more finished look. Advertising Decoration Ideas If your site is level or slightly inclined, it might be a great idea to build an advanced deck. Whether home mounted or independent, top grade decks are relatively easy to design and build. They can be sized and shaped in countless ways. It rarely requires railings or stairs, as it rests near the ground. The on-grade deck is a particularly good addition to single-storey homes and low-profile homes where raised or multilevel decks can look adesthy or overwhelm existing structures. While some luxury decks are designed to sit at the same height as the ground, direct contact with earth requires non-decaying materials, such as pressure-treated wood or non-timber products such as PVC (polyvinyl chloride). Most designs are slightly above the surface of the ground, supplementing uneven or inclined ground and allowing for proper drainage and air circulation. Advertising Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas Independent Deck is a great idea for independent outdoor elements such as patios and landscaping, because its materials and designs can be easily blended with others or adjusted to contrast. The wooden deck lends itself beautifully to combinations with many types of masonry and stones found in patio structures, such as bricks, flagstones and crushed rocks. When colors, shapes, and textures harmonize, the deck and its surroundings often become a unified outdoor space, each flowing into each other. In contrast, different areas can be isolated and used to indicate activity. Here, the deck may fit comfortably into the overall landscape plan, but it is deliberately in contrast to nearby lawns and more distant patios. As an extension of the house, a detached deck should have some connection to the house itself, such as informal gravel or bark paths, more formal walkways, or bridges and platforms. In large gardens and remote areas, a separate deck may not be in the direct gaze of the house, but it should just feel like arm's length. Decorating ideas advertising you may encounter dilemmas related to outdoor living when running your deck ideas. These can be solved with multilevel decks. They can go up and down steep slopes and rocky slopes to convert impossible places into useful places. They may be shaped into space-saving platform progressions to make the most of messy or cramped outdoor areas, or arranged on a wider level of succession to give a new focus to a large, less interesting garden. By adding in-build seating, planters, a place for sun and shade, and perhaps water features, multilevel decks can become a more popular living space than indoor rooms. All decks look their best when they have unityMultiple decks in particular look uncomringly busy with a lack of material and design continuity. You can connect different levels by repeating the details of the handreach, the shape of the platform, or the bench style. Advertising Decoration Ideas Ideas Ideas Multi-level decks are not always employed to solve site problems. Often they work both in the house and in the garden. Often, multiple levels are designed as an integral part of the architecture of the house, to gradually extend the idea of buildings and decks to the natural environment in a fun way. Sometimes they set the stage for a particular style of landscaping or function as bridges and connectors in the landscape. A very large deck has a warm appearance when divided into levels and is usually proportional to the size of the house. Built-in planters and seats help inform level changes and, when properly placed, can also be tackled instead of traditional rails. Multiple decks are also suitable for interesting patterns that can be repeated on other levels - changing the direction of the floorboards on the steps, for example, adjusting diagonal corners or implementing horizontal railings instead of traditional vertical designs. Advertising Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas For a house built on a virtually level site, getting an outdoor living area is a relatively easy matter. A grade deck in the same high position as the ground or concrete or stone patio could just be the idea of the right deck. However, few sites are completely flat, and the solution always requires a deck raised from the ground with a system of posts. The term raised is fairly broad because it encompasses almost all types of decks that are not built directly on the ground. A raised deck can probably float feet above grade enough to raise the deck floor to the same level as the backdoor threshold. Alternatively, it may extend a few feet from the ground to the same level as the interior room and gradually down the slope. Raised decks can be independent structures in the garden or wraparound elements mounted directly on the house. Decks close to the ground usually require a relatively simple support system. As well as more expansive or complex decks, each one that sits on the ground demands a partial structure designed for stability and bearing loads. Advertising Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas Modern homes often express visual drama that lacks a more traditional style. Deliberately lacking ornaments and frills, many contemporary house and deck design ideas focus instead on integrating lines and forms into impressive configurations. In this design, in the architect's own home, the strong vertical and horizontal surfaces are softened by winding walls, echoing into the curve of the medium-level deck and railings. Fluid lines of metal handwork carry nautical themes inspired by ponds sitting near the baseDeck. The open framework of the Advertised Metal Rail and the transparent plexiglass inserts on the walls of the upper deck allow unobstructed views of the surrounding trees and vegetation, even if you sit, eat or soak in the spa. Plexiglass also works as a safety measure, safely containing children and their toys. Nautical themes also influenced the color scheme of the house and deck design - wood-flowing gray on the walls, dark shades on accent trims and hand-wrattles, blue-gray like water on the deck. For more decorative ideas outside the house, see: Patio Ideas decorating ideas The site, which is open to panoramic views, offers a great opportunity for ideas that seek to orientation and styling the house and its deck to take advantage of the spectacular views. The clean architectural lines and large spread of glass that characterize many contemporary homes allow for virtually unhindered views from the interior living area, and when there is space for the deck, the joy is well spread outdoors. Decks are flexible in placement, shape and size, so you can easily custom create them for the best location. If an unobstructed view takes precedence, one solution is to design a series of levels that spread down from the house and away. This arrangement allows those sitting indoors and on the upper floors to usually be seen across the lower area, without visual interference of furniture or handries. If your site allows on-grade or slightly raised decks, another solution is to build an extensive platform that uses low benches and planters to provide safety while maximizing both close and distant views. Ideas to decorate ideas As the suburban population grows and homes adapt to small lots and other restrictions, the idea of building a deck is coming on its own as a functional and fun alternative to traditional backyards. Unlike lawns and most patios, the deck can run to the door at the same level as the interior room, which will be a true extension of the house. They can follow the grounds of the land or knockout to individual courses that create their own landscapes. The decks can also be made and finished with exactly the same materials, colors and textures as the adjoining houses, resulting in a compactness throughout the indoor and outdoor areas. The two-tiered redwood deck, pictured here, was designed as a friendly acquisition of an unfriendly but high-maintenance backyard that sits well under the house and has little to do with the indoor living area. Extending the width of the lot, the new deck includes an above-ground swimming pool, a conversation and dining area, and amenities that previous spaces can only dream of: trellis to provide afternoon shade and privacy from neighbors, requiring little maintenance. Advertising Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas Many houses built over the past 25 years included decks in the original building plan. Decks were usuallyThe idea looked normal. A typical deck usually consisted of a plain rectangular platform projected from the rear façade and sometimes edged with crib-style railings that contained only stairs to the ground. If that sounds too well known, sometimes the remodeling is just what the deck needs to lift it from mediocre to special. The dramatic deck seen here, before its remodeling, fit this plain Jane description. It had no access to the backyard at all, and worse, it undermined the home's impressive contemporary architecture. The dynamic redesign of the deck reflects the precise lines and clean crisp styling of the building and connects the deck to the lawn. Following the slopes, the three levels are built-in benches and planters that accompany the route, inging to make the transition from living area to garden a fun experience. Clearing the plexiglass inserts on the handries provides safety and allows an unobstructed view of the surrounding landscape. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: The idea deck on the patio decorating the idea doesn't have to be limited to all-wood designs to complement the wooden house. One idea that easily changes the look and feel of a deck is how to change the material on the hand can. For example, tubular rails can infuse high-tech notes and give a more modern feel to the overall design. The '50s house shown here got an enthusiastic facelift on a redwood replacement deck high lit by hand reteachers made of steel tubes, finished in vibrant red. To give a fairly narrow deck a little more elbow room, two triangular pop-outs are added alongside the built-in seats, removing the bulky furniture. The new French doors will replace aluminium windows, allowing access from three main areas: the living room, dining room and kitchen. A series of stairs and landings separate various activities such as dining and relaxing in the hot tub, providing an easy route to the backyard. The redwood siding at the bottom of the deck blends in with the existing house, while the diagonal pattern updates the appearance of the building. For more decorative ideas outside the house, see: There may be limited space for decks, either because of the nature of the idea site that decorates the idea, or simply because the outdoor space is at a premium. Such spatial challenges require creative solutions to your deck ideas. One approach that works well in hard-to-reach places and limited outdoor areas is the modular deck system. The modular deck consists of pre-built sections in the store (or garage) and is then assembled on-site. Often, only the floor deck itself is a modular component, but stairs, seats and railings can also be prefabricated into sections that are convenient for transport and assemble quickly. This versatile approach can also save construction work and costs. Another solution to the small space dilemma is to take advantage of every inch available and adjust the deck to an accurate fit. ThatIt means sandwiching a simple platform deck between the fence and the house, or forming a more complex design into a series of tightly interconnected levels. Revamping small, inadequate areas may also be the answer. For example, converting narrow backsteps and concrete walkways into several wide landings with built-in benches and planters provides access to and from the house while encouraging outdoor living. Decorative Ideas Patio Ideas Mountain Vacation Retreats are often hidden in rustic settings that are ideally suited to an array of deck ideas. Abundant trees, nearby wildlife, brisk starry nights, and an informal approach to life are all part of an outdoor experience that you can enjoy from the deck. This redwood house enjoyed a mountain atmosphere but lacked a functional outdoor area for owners to enjoy the sights and sounds of seasonal streams and small waterfalls lying a short distance from the house, originally built without decks. The site was picturesque but rocky, steep and trapped. The solution was a double-decker redwood deck that sat low on the ground and descended a gentle part of the grade to land near a creek. Angled to fit between existing rocks and along stone walls, the connecting stairs gradually narrow and seem to float as they descend to the ground. The built-in bench and integrated hand-held hand-held designed in a light and open style so as not to interfere with the view outside the room. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Ideas decorating ideas Patio ideas for maximum enjoyment and sheer practicality, nothing can strike a deck with some ideas for moving back and forth from the outdoors to the interior. Having multiple access points also provides deck flexibility in the way it works, highlighting its role as an extension of the house and its living space. Decks accessible from many areas can reduce some of the wear caused by foot traffic, for example, usually moving down corridors and crossing family rooms to get outside. If two or three rooms are open to the deck, the entire space can be divided into informal zones that host different features. Comfortable furniture may be grouped near the living room. Barbecues can be placed outside the kitchen, not far from the dining table and chairs. If the deck design incorporates multiple levels, each accessed from a different point, the outdoor area can be home to individual rooms to suit a specific activity. Decorative ideas Enjoying ideas in search of classic architecture is a great idea when dealing with decks. Architectural styles adapted from the classical order of Greek and Roman design have appeared in American buildings since the 1700s. Early Southern colonial mansions were decorated with colonnades that provided shade, but were open to light and wind. Georgian designs included a grand entrance with a pediment roof supported by columns. Romelt incorporates outdoor walkways and pergolas, like Thomas Jefferson's Monticello. The Greek revival style was very popular in the mid-1800s, and carpenters came to it in their new home in America. Today's architects continue to integrate classical principles into their designs. The deck also works particularly well for classics, whether maintaining the correct proportions of the size and scale of the house, bringing balance or symmetry to the shape of the floor, or adding detail to the overhead shelter. Patio idea decorating ideas The artisanal style of architecture emerged in the early 1900s. It was a movement to bring simplicity, beauty, and honesty into home building through traditional crafts and materials. It had the strongest following in the American West and produced homes large and small with diverse designs, including familiar bungalows. This style used wood expressively, exposed the wood, shaped them with bold yet rhythmic lines, and tried to fit them together. Many artisanal designs also took a comprehensive approach to the house and its surroundings, incorporating gardens and outdoor living areas as a planned extension of the house - now a common theme, but not widely practiced in other styles of the era. He also had a strong interest in Japanese art and craftsmanship among craftsmen and architects, bringing a Japanese flavor to many designs. Based on the philosophy of American and Japanese craftsmen, the style is synthesized into a comfortable hybrid that characterizes many houses built in recent years. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Decorating ideas Building an idea deck for an idea patio often means considering the original idea of the house. The region houses are not only adapted to the local geography and climate, but also related to their setting, by using materials that are home to the area, as well as sites, and often by accepting a historically belonging style. Regional, or linguistic, architecture in America evolved over the years as a sensible response to climate and grounds, taking advantage of readily available materials. The tree crabboard house in New England had small windows and a large fireplace to minimize the cold. The Adobe design in the Southwest adopted an extra thick wall to prevent heat. The regional style of the Pacific Northwest reflects the combined appearance of shapes, materials and moods affected by its diverse history and culture. The style of the house shown here is somewhat different, but it accommodates the local situation in a similar way. Enough decking suggested comfortable temperatures and clear skies for most of the year, and a large spread of glass offset the cloudy period by bringing light and views to the interior. All local western red cedar sidings and decks are completed, and the natural beauty of the wood shines through. For more decorative ideasHome, see: Consider the style of your home before adding a deck to it for a patio idea to decorate the idea. In the early 20th century, for example, many traditional architectural styles were revived all over the country. Many of these designs were rooted in a specific period of both American and European history. One of the more popular period styles was tudor, usually a simplified version of an Elizabethan house, distinguished by its stucco and stone exterior, exposed semi-timber and small lead windows. The addition of the redwood deck shown here blends handsomely with the picturesque style of a Tudor house. The eable structure on the French door reflects the shape of the roofline, and its timber frame structure also reminds us of tudor's characteristic semi-timber. Neatly wrapped in redwood siding, the well-integrated deck design visually secures the house to the ground and gives a presence to previously neglected side yards. The dark stained surface is tied with the trim of the house and the walls above the strip, giving the deck a more traditional look. For more decorative ideas outside the house, see: Decorative IdeasPatio idea pouches, unlike decks, are usually associated with old houses or by-bye years, but many current home design ideas integrate front and rear porches into the original plan as a way to expand the living space without adding another interior room. Following an informal lifestyle, more families are discovering the fun of relaxing and entertaining at home, and porches are joining decks and patios as a multifunctional indoor outdoor area. And while porches most often accompany traditional designs, we've found a place among more modern styles, including Victorian, Midwestern farmhouses and toned ranches. Porches are built as an integral part of the house and often share the same foundation and roof system, so they adapt to the same site conditions. They can sit grade on the floor just above the ground or raise their distance from the ground and connect to the garden by stairs. Like most attached decks, the porch floor is almost always on the same level or very close to the interior room, easing the transition between indoors and outdoors. However, unlike many decks, porches usually remain on one continuous level at the end of the house. Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas Privacy screens are an essential idea for deck plans, especially when neighboring homes are too close for comfort or have a direct view of the deck. The screen can be more open in design, like an exterior fence, for ultimate privacy, or to be able to filter light and air. When combined with an overhead cover, it can create the impression of an outdoor room. The open structure of a simple trellis provides a measure of privacy. But if it is planted or covered with grapes, it is as effective as a solid fence. The vertical screen is a useful addition.The wind is strong or the angle of the sun overheats the deck from the side. Around pools and spas, leaves and debris can be prevented from blowing into the water, wind chills can be cut, and deck areas can be used more comfortably and easily maintained. Patio Ideas decorating the idea There's nothing more to weaken the spirit than a rainy barbecue unless you fight off rain or nasty insects that get a glow. Screened enclosures are a great idea to take an edge off the less desirable aspects of deck life while providing fun wind, sights and sounds. On rainy days it will be an ideal playground for kids going home and a welcoming place to camp on a hot summer evening. Screened porches were a common feature of homes built in the early part of this century, especially in warmer parts of the country. But after decks and patios replaced lawns with major outdoor living spaces, screened porches often gave way to additional interior rooms. Existing pouches can be easily screened. If you are sitting on the side of the house or near the rear or kitchen, it can serve as a really private outdoor room for dining and entertainment. Surrounding part of the deck, located near the house, is another option and a way to enjoy the safety of screening, a short walk from the large outdoors. Patio Ideas decorating ideas Whether you think you'll dip into the spa as therapeutic or just fun, integrating the spa into your deck ideas can be achieved relatively easily. Like the swimming pool, the spa barely take up room and can be incorporated into a deck of small spaces hidden in narrow corners or narrow side yards. They are protected from the wind and neighbors and are most enjoyed when located in a quiet place not far from the house. A typical spa has about the same height around it, but can be designed to stand up on the floor. Despite the appearance, spas and hot tubs are rarely supported by the deck itself. Usually, they are placed directly on the ground or on a part of the deck's understructure. Because they are not structural, the perimeter of the deck can be laid out in myriad ways to create dramatic floor patterns, highlight immersion areas or simply echo the shape of the spa. Decorating ideas, Patio ideas are refreshing and exhilarating, fun for all ages, and the swimming pool will add a time of joy to outdoor life. The pool is often the dominant element of the garden, so the way they are surrounded can simply make a difference between the right deck idea and simply a great idea. Because of its versatility, the wood deck make an excellent choice for all or part of the pool surround. The wood integrates well with other materials often found around the pool (tiles, bricks, natural stone), and the deck can be designed to adopt almost any shape the area needs. If the ground around the pool is uneven or sloping, the timber deck is sometimes the best solution. Generally speaking, surround should be at least the same size as the area of the pool (preferablyAllows plenty of space for a variety of options for tables, chairs, and seating. A sandy place nearby to seek relief from the sun is also desirable. The surround, which covers a large expanse, looks friendlier when divided into levels and treated as several outdoor rooms. Changing the direction and pattern of the board can also help shrink large decks. Surrounds, which must fit in tight spaces, take up little space, but look bigger when edged with built-in benches that provide a place to sit and stretch in the sun. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Decorating ideas patio ideas On warm summer days when the kitchen feels like an oven, it's a great idea to cook on deck. Even when the temperature is just right, the outdoor barbecue area is a great place for informal gatherings and meals with family and friends. Whether built into part of the deck or located nearby, the barbecue/cooking center works best when not far from home - transporting food and food can be a hassle - but not as close as smoke or smell drifting indoors. It's also wise to keep the barbecue away from over-overed limbs. This prevents heat damage to the leaves and helps with fire safety. Simple kettle-style units with charcoal briquettes and built-in masonry designs work perfectly well, but gas-fueled barbecues have become a popular choice. But regardless of equipment, augmenting the cooking area with counters, shelves, storage, and possibly sinks can be a real bonus for entertaining frequently. Even if your deck plan can't accommodate a kitchenette, creating an area for storing essentials such as charcoal and cooking utensils makes cooking outdoors easier. Patio ideas decorating ideas Without overhead shades, sunny decks can be unbearably hot during the summer months, and if they are sitting near the house, they can reflect the heat inside. Unless the deck has a large leafy tree or overt roof nearby, it is a good idea to have some kind of cover or shelter to spell out the relief. The shaded structure should be designed to mitigate the sun's rays without disturbing the light, air, or desired view from the deck. It should also be compatible with the style of the house and the size and scale of the deck it evacuates. Most overhead screens consist of wood such as boards, slats and latticework, but can also be made from other materials such as bamboo and leads. Canvas eye and translucent plastic are also good choices when rain and sun elements prevent you from enjoying the deck. The overhead shelter also functions as a privacy screen, hiding the view from the upper room and the building next door. When the board is closely positioned or covered with a pull, the lower deck is surrounded like an indoor room and can feel attractive. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Patio ideas decorating ideas Are essentially arbors with open roofs, pergolas are excellent ideas to giveHighlight special features such as a deck or garden that lack visual interest, or a spa or conversation area. Very noticeable in many pergola designs, rafters and crosspieces can also add height and mass to other flat parts of the deck. Pergolas are often intended to function strictly as decorative or architectural elements in deck design. However, there are some minor changes to the open roof system, and perhaps with the addition of a climbing vly or two, the pergola can become a dramatic overhead haven. The pergola can also adopt a series of separate vertical structures visually connected with a band of horizontal boards at the top. This elongated design is suitable for unifying different areas of the deck, explaining sidewalks, and giving the impression of covered passages from one part of the garden to another. Racing above your green head allows you to take on the feeling of Arbor. Patio Ideas Decorating ideas The most popular deck idea in victorian times was a gazebo: the structure of airy summer houses and gardens set away from the main house, often in Knoll, where the views were particularly enjoyable. Like fashion, they were elaborately styled and decorated with intricate fretwork. Today's gazebos serve the same function and provide an open-air retreat. Most modern gazebos have a simpler style than their predecessors, but they often have the same traditional octagonal shape, turret roof and decorative details. As a structure that complements both the home and the garden, the gazebo can function as more than a seat with attractive focus and views. It may function as a fascinating spot for a children's playground or Sunday brunch. Partially enclosed, it can function as a poolside changing room, studio, or storage area for garden utensils. But for your specific needs, gazebos can bring old-fashioned pleasure to the garden. Decoration Ideas Patio Ideas For decks more than a few feet above ground, hand-hold is an essential safety feature. They are also one of the more prominent elements of deck planning and lend themselves to custom treatments and ideas that can enhance the overall design. The familiar crib-style hand gripder has a great appeal for its basic, simple lines and easy construction, but it can take a custom effect in several variations. Narrow tubular piping can replace stringers between columns, for example, or railings (vertical parts of rails) can stop near normal height, leaving an opening under the top horizontal railing, or cap, to provide more open view when seated. If an unobstructed view is the primary objective, the handprue design can incorporate plexiglass inserts, stainless steel cables, or wire mesh screening (welded fabric). If more privacy or less street noise is required, the handr can probably take the form of a solid semi-walled or low-grating fence toppedWith a little planning and imagination, the choices are endless. For more decorating ideas outside the house, see: Patio ideas decorating ideas Every deck needs a place or two to sit, whether to read, relax after a long day, or chat with friends. And while groups of chairs can do their job well, the built-in wooden benches provide an alternative idea that will suit the look and feel of the deck. Built-in benches also consume less space and, when placed along the perimeter, can free up some of the deck for other activities. These practical accents can be used as a focal point to showcase unusual designs and beautiful craft. Alternatively, you can style it to blend in quietly so that other features can take center stage. The built-in bench can be pushed into or out of the sun, so it should be carefully considered. A good solution is to strategically place benches in areas that receive both sun and shade at different times of the day. The well-designed bench is comfortable and spacious enough for two people to sit on. If it's not deep enough, it will feel like a dead end, not a seat. The long, deeper-than-usual bench serves as a platform for sunbathing, with cushions and a great place to stretch for a nap. Patio Idea decorating ideas Unlike stairs and railings, an essential ingredient for most decks, fire pits are the idea of accent decks that are meant for pure enjoyment of outdoor space. Like a campfire in a forest or beach, it warms hands and feet and stimulates friendly conversations among those gathered, while fire pits bring warmth and conversation closer to home. Fire pits can be especially welcoming when the night cools down or the day becomes brisk, extending the life of the deck as an outdoor room. Fire pits are often located on patches of ground near the deck and its activities. However, when integrating directly into the deck design, the fireboard requires careful planning. As its weight and safety measures, the base should sit directly on the ground. This is most effective on on-grade decks. With raised decks, the base can be built to the desired height using concrete blocks or masonry materials. More decorative bricks and natural stones can be used for edging and trimming, but fire holes should also be lined with heat-resistant fire-resistant bricks. Finally, the sides of the fire hole should be high enough to prevent the surrounding deckboards from being damaged or burned by the fire. An alternative to masonry fire holes is a separate metal wood burner. Often dish-shaped, it can stand on the foot and place on a protected surface. As rewarding and versatile as the Patio idea deck that decorates ideas, sometimes the spread of wood requires a splash of color to spice things up. Planter is one of the easiest and cheapest ideas for incorporating or standing freedom to dress up the deck and visually tie it to the rest of the house or landscape. Planters may beAs a handreach design at the top of the column, a pillar connecting sections, or as part of the handreach itself. On a deck sitting near the ground, planters can be grouped to follow the edges and give a definition of the area. You can mark stairs, indicate level changes, and place decks to divide into zones. On-grade decks can be cut into deck floors to accommodate plants and allow them to take root directly into the ground, and planter themes can be used in yet another way. Planters bring more than color to the deck. With proper drainage and a little care, annual and perennial flowers can provide aromas and flowers over a long period of time. Vegetables and fruits that grow well in spaces that contain cherry tomatoes, peppers, strawberries, etc. can supply a little fresh summer ingredients. Even in winter, the planter's small berry-producing shrubs can add seasonal colors and cheers. Decoration Idea Patio Idea Built-in Planter can be the best idea for a small deck, especially when kept in small size and scale of the area, in combination with built-in seating. You can cluster into space-saving groups on one side of the deck, or you can cluster with level changes to provide additional open space and improve traffic flow. Planter walls can be designed as back for benches; Of course, large decks can often benefit from planters without the restrictions imposed by smaller areas. Large planters can be particularly useful as privacy screens when filled with tall or bushy plants or when combined with vertical trellis. Planters of any shape or size should be built from wood that is resistant to decay and retains its good looks over time. Redwood, among a handful of other species, is a popular choice for many deck projects. However, it is important to choose the right grade of wood for the job. Cut from the center of the tree, the heartwood is resistant to rot, which can occur when wood comes into contact with water or soil, and is naturally resistant. Any grade, including heart in its name, such as construction heart or all heart, is the ideal material for planters. For nighttime activities on the Patio Idea Deck that decorate ideas, it is recommended to have the right lighting to assist with tasks such as cooking and eating, make socializing more enjoyable and especially to increase safety with stairs and level changes. Often, exterior residential lights do the job, especially if the deck is near the building. For aesthetics and maximum enjoyment, the lighting designed specifically for the deck is a detail worth having. Low voltage lighting is recommended anywhere on the deck, patio or outdoors. Even wet or bare wires can be economically executed, relatively easy to install and never shocked. In addition, there are a number of options between low voltage fixtures suitable for any style deck. Surface/deck light,is a discreet instrument that can be mounted horizontally or vertically on wooden surfaces such as railings, steps, planter boxes and benches. Tearlights that spread light evenly around a specific area can be strategically attached to the deck floor, at the top and bottom of stairs, and near seats to illuminate the overall space. The illuminator can be used in combination with other lighting to highlight deck design features such as pools and spas, or to tie the deck area to the surrounding garden. In fact, like the versatile decks they illuminate, outdoor lighting offers endless possibilities. Whether it's the focal point of the garden decorating the idea or just highlighting the existing landscape, a separate deck is yet another way to get an outdoor living space. They can be welcomed if the composition of the house is hindering the attached deck, or when the ideal place (trees of trees, near a stream, or overlooking the garden) is a little far away. A separate deck is the ideal way to dress up a previously garden drab, neglected corner by transforming it into a secluded retreat for reading, a lively playground for kids, or a stage for displaying colorful pottery and plants. The term self-reliance may suggest a flimsy or temporary solution, but stand-alone decks are usually permanent fixtures that comply with the same structural requirements as other deck types. The design may be as complex as a low-level platform floating directly above the ground, or a multilevel level system of platforms and connectors that go up and down inclines or extend across the garden. But plain or fancy, detached decks can provide outdoor living at its best. Patio Idea Wood decorating ideas has traditionally been associated with decks, but it is a material that requires maintenance to stay healthy and keep looking its best. In wet environments, wood can rot. In hot places, wood can crack and cause debris when exposed to the sun's ULTRAVIOLET rays. A properly unseeded deck can be hosted on mold. Painted surfaces require extra maintenance. And the natural colors of almost all wooden decks fade in time. One practical alternative to the shortcomings of wood is synthetic deck materials such as PVC vinyl. Formulated with weather resistance and virtually maintenance-free, pvc vinyl decks are durable, do not require cracking or warping, and do not require painting. This type of deck is available in traditional or contemporary looks and offers a number of hand-made designs that can be harmonized with various house styles. Decorative Ideas One of the most familiar, attractive and practical structures to support the patio idea deck and the surrounding plants, Trellis requires little introduction. It usually consists of thin wooden strips nailed together in an open weave or lattice design, and the trellis displays a fairly thin profile. You can mount it on a wall, stand alone on a sturdy base, or use overhead as support for both.Grapes and ayning. Trellis can also function as simple, inexpensive fencing to camouflage privacy screens and practical side yards, or to divert attention from unseetable views. Arbors, also usually made up of wood, function as a support for plants. However, different from trellis, Arbor is a separate garden structure with space under it, which tends to walk and sit and simply shade plants. Covered in grapes and blackberries, Arbor is a welcoming companion to vegetables and flower gardens and a fun place to gather adults and children and harvest fruit. Decorative Ideas Patio Idea Trees have a special place in the home landscape, providing privacy, shade and wind protection while adding color, texture and natural beauty. Replacing mature trees to make room for outdoor living areas solves one problem, but you can create another. Fortunately, the flexibility of the wooden deck, which adapts to different sites, gives you the option to include wood in its design. Like many patios, decks can closely enclose trees without interfering with the root system or blocking air and water supplies. However, the opening around the trunk should be large enough to allow continuous growth, especially if the tree is a young or rapid grower. Benches and wooden enclosures appear to be meant for each other, whether separate benches sit near the base or a single seat is wrapped all the way. Surrounds can also take the form of high low walls above the deck floor, are large enough for a comfortable sitting, and are tall enough to double as a handreach filled with shade-loving flowers and small shrubs - as long as they and the trees require the same soil and water conditions.
